Your Wedding Day

And the Famous Men and Women Who Have Shared It With You.

By Mary Marshall

July 2—Aaron Burr and Theodosia Prevost.

It was from knowing his wife, said Aaron Burr, that he first began to believe in women. It is interesting to know that the woman who so influenced this skeptical man was 10 years older than he was, possessed no fortune, had poor health, was not beautiful—but had a pronounced scar on the forehead—and was a widow with two dependent sons. Burr, apparently not aware of any faults in his wife, used to say that in style and manner she was with-out a peer and that if he was superior to any other men in manner it was because of her influence on him.

So it must be that Mrs. Aaron Burr was a woman of great charm and character. We have the testimony of others, that she was very affectionate, that she was well read and accomplished and that her personality was pleasant. Both she and Burr were very fond of reading and books and both loved pictures, so their tastes were decidedly congenial. Furthermore both of them were very fond of her two sons by her first marriage.

Aaron Burr and Theodosia Prevost were married on July 2, 1782, 135 years ago, by the Rev. David Bogart. They set up housekeeping in Albany, N. Y., where they lived in very good style. Their only child, Theodosia, born within a year of their marriage, was devotedly loved by her father, to whom she was faithful even in the time of his deepest disgrace and trouble.

Mrs. Burr died 12 years after her marriage. She had been in poor health for a long time and Burr had been all tenderness and devotion to her. Perhaps the best tribute to the success of their marriage is contained in the words of one of Burr's biographers when he says that Mrs. Burr "lived and died, satisfied, beloved and trusted."

Many years after his first wife's death Burr remarried when he was 78. His second wife was Madame Jumel, a very well-to-do widow. But apparently the memory of Theodosia Prevost was a tender one to the end of his days, for one of his last words was: "The mother of my Theo was the best woman and the finest lady I have ever known." Perhaps few men famous or otherwise have a marriage record as old as Burr's. For his first marriage occurred when he was 23 and his second occurred more than half a century later when he was 78. Yet he was a widower the greater part of his adult life.

The Housewife's Economy Calendar

By Francis Marshall

TO CLEAN YOUR FURNITURE.

The problem of keeping furniture perfectly clean without by any chance injuring the finish of the wood is a problem that sometimes causes careful housewives a little concern. For it is a fact that highly finished furniture ought not to be washed with soap and water and yet unless we wash things with soap and water we do not feel that they are perfectly clean.

Especially in summer cleanliness is of prime importance. We can well dispense with the high polish that we used to give our furniture at the expense of much furniture polish and more elbow grease. If our furniture is perfectly clean, unspotted and free from dust we shall be much better suited.

There is one nice thing about willow and reed furniture which has deservedly become so popular with us in the last decade, and that is that it takes to water like the proverbial duck. In fact, water is the natural habitat of the plant from which reeds are taken.

The best way to wash reed furniture is to have it well washed with the hose. If you have a house of your own, just have the reed chairs set out on the lawn some day when there is enough sunshine in the air to make short work of drying them. Have them washed briskly, making sure by the use of a strong force of water that the water goes into each crack and crevice. If there are varnished portions on the seat or arms of the chair, take pains that these portions should be dried immediately with a cloth. And then let the reeds take care of themselves. This is an especially good treatment for reed chairs just before having them restained or painted.

Not all housewives know that water if mixed with a little oil and if used not in excess, can clean even the furniture. A dining room table that is used with dories or runners ought always to be cleared in this way. It is the only way to take off the stickiness that is bound to come. And the treatment cannot injure even the finest mahogany or most prized black walnut.

You should have a nice heavy flannel cloth ready and then you should measure out a quart of boiling water in a pan or small pail. Then, accurately, add one tablespoon of turpentine and three times as much linseed oil. Mix as well as possible and drop in the cloth. It is convenient to agitate the mixture with a wooden stick and with the wooden stick the cloth should be wrung out. With this cloth rub over the top of the table. When wetting the cloth again see that the mixture is agitated again, for the oil naturally rises to the top if not mixed.

Have a second dry woolen cloth set out on the lawn some day when there is enough sunshine in the air to make short work of drying them. Have them washed briskly, making sure by the use of a strong force of water that the water goes into each crack and crevice. If there are varnished portions on the seat or arms of the chair, take pains that these portions should be dried immediately with a cloth. And then

MISTAKES AUTO FOR CYCLE, CARS WRECKED

After eight weeks of hard training in the officers' reserve corps at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Clark Carson and Raymond Littleton, two local men, returned home Saturday night, and they both would have been much better off if they remained at camp with the rest of the future officers. Carson's brand new Studebaker is a heap of junk after an accident early Sunday morning when Carson and Little and a party of friends were returning from Hudson Lake.

The accident happened just after the South Bend party had left New Carlisle a Ford came rambling down the road with only one light on the outside and Carson, who was at the wheel, mistook it for a motorcycle. The crash followed. Luckily none of the party were seriously injured, while the new car is beyond repair.

TOMORROW'S MENU

"Pulled from the fair head of the straight-crown pine." — Beaumont and Fletcher.

Breakfast.

Raspberries. Cereal and Cream. Meek Sausage. Graham Muffins. Coffee.

Luncheon or Supper.

Hominy Croquettes. Sliced Tomatoes. Sugar Cookies. Chocolate.

Dinner.

Vegetable Soup. Tongue. Potatoes. String Beans. Pineapple Salad. Raspberry Shortcake.

Mock sausage—Put a cupful of well cooked lima beans through the meat grinder and mix with a cupful of soft bread crumbs, add three tablespoonsful of butter or good drippings, salt, pepper and sage to taste. Shape into the form of sausages, adding a little water or stock if necessary. Roll in the crumbs, a beaten egg and then in the crumbs again. Fry on the gridle or frying pan as you would breakfast sausages.

Hominy croquettes—This is a very good meat substitute for a light dinner. Mix a half cupful of milk with a cup and a half of meat stock in a double boiler and when hot add a half cupful of hominy. Cover and cook for 40 minutes. Then add salt, pepper and a few drops of lemon juice to taste. Dip in crumbs and egg and fry in deep fat.

Warmied-on tongue—Cut cold tongue into small dice and if there be any portions near the root that do not seem perfectly tender, remove the fat and stew them in water to cover until tender, then add the better portions and any of the made gravy that may be left. Or, if this be lacking, you may thicken the water in which the tongue has been stewed, add season it with lemon juice, Worcestershire sauce, or catsup. Heap mashed and seasoned potato round the edge of a platter and pour the warmed tongue into the center.
